FCC:

Be advised that I find XM radio's local weather and traffic info far superior to regular broadcast -- it's available 24/7 -- not just during rush-hour and I can get it anywhere. This is vary helpful as I am approaching Dallas, TX, from the south -- it alerts me when I want the info of any potential problems so I can avoid them on my way home.

It is beyond me to understand how the FCC could consider limiting such a service -- isn't it part of a license agreement that the broadcaster provide some good back to the community for the use of our spectrum? well, this is a fine service... Besides XM is a fee based service and content there I believe should be handled like cable tv.

Bottom Line: The local wx / traffic reports on satellite radio serve me well and I expect you (my government) to support and defend it... The spectrem belongs to us all -- it's public property -- let it serve the public. Let the forces of economics decide which model is best.

Thanks,
